New Lenox Boy Drowns In Creek

Body of Thomas Shepley Found In Hickory Creek Near New Lenox By Searching Party

Torrential rains in the southeast part of Will County Tuesday afternoon caused a sudden rise of water in Hickory Creek so that where ordinarily there are only a few inches of water on the creek bed, a raging torrent from six feet and more went down the creek and this swollen stream resulted in the drowning of Thomas Shepley, son of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Shepley of New Lenox.

The lad was twenty-one years old and resided with his parents on a farm near New Lenox.

He left home about 4:30 o'clock to drive the cattle home. When he left home he was wearing hip boots. When he failed to arrive home at 5:30 o'clock his parents became quite alarmed and worried. The father is said to have climbed the wind mill tower to survey the countryside for the absent son, but only saw the cattle swimming in the swollen stream.

When night fall came and the boy still did not show up, the Will County sheriff's office was notified. The alarm also was spread in New Lenox and soon over a hundred men and boys began searching for the missing youth. His footsteps were traced on the soft banks of the creek and abruptly ended, thus adding to the belief that he had slipped into the swift running flood waters of the creek and had drowned as it was known that the boy could not swim.

The Boy Scouts of New Lenox also took up the search and patrolled the creek all night long.

Wednesday morning deputies from the sheriff's office used grappling hooks and dragged the creek from the vicinity of the Shepley farm to the dam in Pilcher Park east of Joliet with no results.

By Wednesday afternoon the water in the creek was near the normal stage and a group of men banded together and waded in the stream.

About 8 o'clock Wednesday evening the body was found on the creek bottom at a point about three quarters of a mile west of the spot where he is supposed to have fallen into the creek. When found the boy was clasping a lily in one hand. It is thought that when he fell into the swollen stream he tried to grab hold of something but all he grabbed was a lily pad. The body and face was somewhat battered, presumably by the wash of the water hurling the body against the rocks in the creek.

It is thought that the water filled hip boots acted like a weight and held the body down.

The spot where the body was recovered is about one thousand feet west of the Rock Island bridge over Hickory Creek between New Lenox and Mokena.

Besides the parents, three sisters and a brother survive.

Funeral services were to be held in Joliet Saturday morning.

The Shepley family reside on the old Mattes farm east of New Lenox.

New Lenox Post Office Advanced To Third Class

Beginning July 1st, the New Lenox post office has been advanced to third class from 4th class, due to increased business and receipts the past year. The salary of postmaster Elsie O'Daniel has also been increased.

Mokena Bible School Closes With Program

The Mokena Daily Vacation Bible School with an enrollment of over 90 pupils, closed last Friday night with a special program at the Mokena School auditorium. A very pleasing program was presented with Mrs. Theodore Haelele in charge.

At the close of the program the work of the students was exhibited. This is the first successful Daily Vacation Bible School held in Mokena and it is planned to make next year's school bigger and better.

Radio Pastor Invokes Spirit of Pilgrims In Marley Address

Since 1881 Marley has been celebrating the nation's birthday, the Fourth of July. This year marked the 54th annual celebration of this event. The first celebration was in the nature of a family picnic held at the Haley home in 1881. Next year the neighbors joined in the celebration and it steadily grew into a community affair.

This year there was the usual parade and picnic in the Storm Grove. The big outstanding part of the day was the appearance of Rev. J. W. Holland of WLS radio fame who at one time was pastor of the New Lenox M. E. and who is personally known to many of the older residents of New Lenox and Marley.

Rev. Mr. Holland struck a popular chord during his address in the afternoon when he pointed out that we must go back to the ideals and precepts of our nation's founders of America is to preserve its democratic form of government and remain a Republic.

In the course of his remarks he went back to the Pilgrim fathers and pointed out that with them there were two principals that could not be mixed, that of right and wrong. They believed in a God of justice. Honor, integrity and the sanctity of the home and marriage and obedience to the laws of the land were the very essence of their being and on these high principles the very foundation of our nation was laid.

Rev. Mr. Holland decried the looseness of present day morals and the cheapness with which marriage and the home life is regarded.

He stated we have become a nation of law breakers. He showed that we are loaded up with many iniquitous laws, but that instead of enforcing them until the people would abolish them, we allow these laws to stand and encourage their very violation, which has created in the minds of many of the on coming generation a wholesale disregard and disrespect for all laws.

Rev. Mr. Holland also hit the New Deal administration by stating that America has no room for dictators and especially when they are told by Washington what to raise, what to charge and what to eat.

He said America is not dead yet and will come back on the right road if the people will cease following after false gods and return to the ideals of the nation's founders.

The speaker in closing declared the American people must keep this nation "The land of the free and the home of the brave" and not allow to become "The land of the spire and the home of the knave."

Other numbers on the program were selections by a boys quartet from Culum, Illinois, a reading by Miss Isabella Anderson. Rev. Jay of the Homer Congregational church offered the invocation. James Frazer served as chairman.

Following the program many old time friendships were renewed and the young folks had their fun with a snappy ball game in which the New Lenox and Homer baseball teams participated.

Hand Press Shown In Parades

The News-Bulletin had its first printing press in the parades at Marley and Tinley Park the Fourth of July. The press was mounted on a new Chevrolet driven by the Mokena Motor Sales in both parades. Cards bearing the following were printed on the moving truck and were tossed out to the crowds by little boys:

A FEW DROPS OF INK MAKES MILLIONS THINK!

In the early days of our struggle for National Independence, Benjamin Franklin spread knowledge thruout the Colonies thru his printing press. Today printers ink is making more millions think than ever before.

We have been engaged in producing this thought provoking product since April 1916 when the present News-Bulletin office was opened in Mokena and our first printing was done on the hand press on which this card was printed. Now we do our printing on electrically operated presses.

Printers Ink Brings Results!

Asked to Cut Grass

Frankfort property owners and especially those owning vacant lots are requested by the village board to see that all tall grass and weeds on such property is kept cut.

Mokena Streets Being Put In Excellent Shape

After being the butt of jokes for years about its poor streets, Mokena is now in line for being complimented on its excellent streets.

Mokena street, McGovney street and Division street have been finished and have been opened to traffic. These streets were first scarified, rolled, fine screenings laid down, then oiled, following which an asphalt composition was spread and a coat of fine screenings applied on top of this. This makes a smooth, durable road.

The Front street has been cut down and the gravel thus dug up is being placed on the back street running east of Nietherhamer avenue by the Adam Barenz place up to the north and south gravel road in front of the Charles Geuther place.

A number of the unemployed have been employed on the road work. With the completion of Front street every street in Mokena will be in excellent shape.

Assessment Roll Being Published

This week's issue contains the real estate rolls of Will and Green Garden townships and the personal property list of Frankfort township. In next week's issue will appear the real estate assessment roll of Frankfort township, the third largest township in Will County.

This Cat Has More Than Nine Lives

The old saying is that cats have nine lives, but in this case it would appear they must have even more. A black tom cat known as "Big Boy" belonging to the editor's family was missed from home last Thursday. Friday evening during a rain storm the animal came home but in a terrible shape. It was minus its tail, the right hind leg had been cut off near the body, the toes of the right front paw were hanging by a thread and there was a deep cut on the left front paw. The cat died shortly after being taken to a cat and dog hospital in Chicago Heights. The cat had a habit of roaming in a hay field west of the Erhard Oswald home for field mice. It is presumed that the animal was cut up by a mowing machine operating in the hay field Thursday afternoon.

Frankfort to Curb Speeders

The Frankfort village board has decreed that all speeding and disorderly driving on the streets within the village must be stopped. Arrangements have been made to make arrests and all those driving over 25 miles per hour within the village limits will be picked up and assessed a fine.

Frankfort to Shut off Delinquent Patrons

The water committee of the Frankfort village board has been having much difficulty in collecting long overdue water bills, some over $50 and $60 and in order to make the delinquent water users come to time, all those who have bills long in arrears will be shut off if these bills are not paid by July 10.

The village has cut the cost of tapping water mains from $50 to $40 and feels that the water users should co-operate and pay up their water bills so that the village water department can be made self sustaining.

Another license that has been hard to collect is the dog license. All dog licenses are now due and must be paid by July 10th.

Orland Bible School Closes With Exhibit

The Daily Vacation Bible School conducted by the Orland Park church school came to a close last Saturday. There had been an excellent attendance and much good was accomplished. On Sunday morning the regular morning worship was given over entirely to a program by the children of the Vacation school classes which was very interesting and very enjoyable. An exhibit of the crafts work accomplished by the children during the two weeks session of the school was quite interesting and gave excellent proof of the application of the children to their work and of the interest and ability of their instructors in their charge.

HOMES FLOODED BY HEAVY RAINS

Torrential rains swept the Orland Tinley Park and south eastern Will County sections Tuesday and Wednesday. The Hickory Creek rose swiftly and within a few hours the flood waters had overflowed the banks of the stream.

The flat lands along the creek in the Lincoln Estates were inundated and a number of dwellings were surrounded by water from two to three feet deep. One house was badly flooded, the water running in thru the windows.

Water was within a foot of the floor of the Hickory Creek bridge on Kean avenue north of Frankfort.

The creek was out of its banks south of Mokena and the water was within a few feet of the dwelling of Mrs. Rogers.

Wolf Road Held Up Once More

Progress on the completion of the Wolf road has been interrupted by the inability of the county to secure a clear title for a right of way thru the former McCord property south of Hickory Creek bridge. The property is heavily indebted and efforts are being made by the creditors to clear up the property so a clear title can be given. A receiver is to be appointed for the property. Efforts were made last week to have Otto Bartels, cashier of the Mokena State Bank appointed as receiver, but Mr. Bartels refused the job.

According to county engineer Glen T. Fletcher, nothing can be done on this project until Sept. The county expects to let the contract this fall so the necessary grading work can be done. The actual paving will not be done until next spring, as a long deep fill in the Cleveland land must be allowed to settle over winter.

Large Crowd At St. Michael's Picnic

The Fourth of July celebration staged by the St. Michael Catholic church at Orland Park in the forest preserve on 143rd street was very largely attended. A parade was a feature of the celebration. A chicken dinner was served in the church hall at noon.

Frankfort Will Have Massed Band Concert Next Wed.

Wednesday evening, July 10th there will be a mass band concert and mass parade of the Plainfield and Frankfort bands, the combined bands numbering 85 pieces. The concert will be held on the Frankfort school grounds beginning at eight o'clock and the parade will precede the concert. In event of rain the parade and concert will be held the following evening. Everyone is invited to hear this outdoor musical treat.

Frankfort Taboos Rifle Shooting

Frankfort is drawing the line on boys shooting 22 rifles within the village limits and warns against the continuing of this practise. There is a village ordinance against shooting firearms within the village limits and this ordinance will be enforced.

To Hold Benefit Dance at Frankfort

The Mokena Unit of the United Unemployed will sponsor a benefit dance at the Frankfort Grove on July 13th. Good music. Everyone is invited.

Mokena Treasurer Is Re-appointed

With the ending of the fiscal year of the village of Mokena on June 30th the tenure of the office of village treasurer held by Otto Bartels, cashier of the Mokena State Bank also expired. The village board re-appointed Mr. Bartels for the ensuing year at their meeting Tuesday evening.

Mr. Bartels has held this office for a number of years, succeeding the late John Liess and has set an excellent record.

Mokena To Arrest Reckless Drivers

Mokena is having a problem regarding reckless driving in the village. At the village board meeting Tuesday night, the board members expressed themselves that measures will have to be taken to curb the wild driving before a serious or fatal accident occurs. The board decided that the only way to stop this dangerous practise is to arrest the offenders, jail them and bring them before the local police magistrate.

If a few of the smart alecks who are guilty of reckless driving were assessed a stiff fine or imprisoned, it would put a stop to the menace, in the opinion of the village board.

Mokena Passes $4100 Appropriation Bill

The Mokena village fathers at their meeting Tuesday night, decided that the cost of operating the village government is greater than can be met with the appropriations as formerly made, so they voted to increase the tax appropriation ordinance from $3800 to $4100.

This appropriation is for the ensuing year.

Wife of Former Bremen Official Dies

Mrs. Anna De Rudder, wife of Louis DeRudder, former Bremen township justice of the peace, died Sunday at St. Francis hospital, in Blue Island. The remains were taken to Hickey's Funeral Home, Oak Forest.

She is survived by her husband, five children: Francis, Louis, Peter, Elizabeth and John.

Funeral services were held Wednesday July 3rd at St. Christopher church in Midlothian. Burial in Mt. Hope cemetery.

V. F. W. Dance Well Attended on 4th

The Fourth of July celebration staged by the Wm. Martin Post 725 of the V. F. W., at the Frankfort Grove drew an exceptionally large crowd. Sports and games and a concert by the Frankfort band occupied the afternoon. In the evening a big dance was held which was so largely attended that the big dance pavilion was crowded to capacity. Taken all in all the celebration was a huge success in every way.

Will Add Collection Charges to Bills

The matter of collecting outstanding water and vehicle licenses was given much attention by the Mokena village board Tuesday night and it was decreed by the board that a special collector be employed to collect the delinquent bills and that the extra collection charges be added to the bills.

AWARD PRIZES IN TINLEY 4TH OF JULY PARADE

In spite of the fact that a heavy rain storm swept the Tinley territory an hour before the Fourth of July parade was scheduled to start Thursday evening, a good sized crowd witnessed the parade and attended the rance held at Saenger Hall.

The parade formed at the north end of the village and headed by the Tinley Park Post of the American Legion and the Frankfort band the parade marched down Oak Park avenue to Kirchen street and thence to the Linden Garden. The Frankfort band played a number of selections in front of the Grove.

There were quite a number of decorated floats. The Tinley Park Volunteer Fire Department also took part in the parade. The following cash prizes were awarded:

Funniest entry representing the famous Dionne quintuplets by Shirely Fulton and Joyce Vanderberg $2; best decorated float Henry Voss, Jr., $2; largest marching body, Sons of American Legion and the Needle Club tied and each received $2 cash.

The judges were Henry Bechstein, John Werth and J. Henderson.

The parade and dance was sponsored by the Tinley T. Y. O. assisted by Mr. and Mrs. Henry Bodt.

There were enteries from a number of out side towns in the parade.

About an hour before the parade was to start a very heavy thunderstorm arose and a drenching rain fell so that the fields and parts of the pavements were under water. A heavy wind lodged heavy stands of oats and wheat. A hail storm was reported in the vicinity of Blue Island and Harvey.

To Dedicate New Lenox Diamond

The New Lenox Kitten ball diamond on the western edge of the village has been equipped with lights and was to be dedicated Friday night. The land for the diamond was donated by Senator R. J. Barr some time ago.

Rain Halts Paving

The laying of the pavement on Cedar Street north of New Lenox has been held up again by the heavy rains. Work on the road was begun in April and has been continually interrupted by rain.

Appeals to Those of Mature Figure

PATTERN 9342

Capes? Everybody loves them—they've descended upon fashion like April showers. All sorts of capes. In this charming dress the cape influence is minimized, but it is used to advantage. Joining in front like a raglan sleeve, and cut in one with the yoke in back, these cape sleeves give grace and proper proportioning to the mature figure. A small bow, adroitly placed, adds a winsome touch at the bodice. You'll find the cut of the skirt excellent, too. It's a grand dress to make up in a flower print or a solid sheer, or in voile or lawn for the heat waves to come. The capes may contrast.

Pattern 9342 may be ordered only in sizes 16, 18, 20, 22, 24, 26, 28, 30, 32, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44. Size 36 requires 3 3/4 yards 39 inch fabric.

SYNOPSIS

Theodore Gatlin adopts a baby, "Penelope," in an effort to solve his matrimonial troubles. But his wife has never wanted her, and their affairs end in the divorce court. At a baseball game a ball strikes ten-year-old Penelope on the nose. Mrs. Gatlin spirits the child to Europe. Gatlin visits Penelope all his money, and is about to begin a search for her when a motor accident ends his life. Some ten years later, in San Francisco, Stephen Burt, rising young psychiatrist, is presented by Dan McNamara, chief of police, with a new patient—Nance Belden, a girl with a dual personality, for which her "saddle nose" is in part responsible. McNamara does not think she is a criminal and obtains Burt's testimony in court. Lanny, the doctor's office nurse, is also won over. Nance's criminal record outweighs Doctor Burt's explanation of her case and she is sent to San Quentin penitentiary. Nance escapes, and goes to Lanny's apartment. From one of the men in the boat on which the girl escaped McNamara learns that her real name is Penelope Gatlin. He also discovers that she is heiress to $750,000. Fearful of McNamara, in his official capacity, Nance flees. Lanny finds her in her apartment, asleep. Then she disappears, and McNamara learns that she is living in Paris. He also discovers he is in love with Lanny. Stephen warns Penelope by cable to leave Paris, as her whereabouts are known.

CHAPTER IX—Continued

"Make up your mind now that you will never mention those two names again as long as you live. You promise?"

"Yes, Doctor."

"Now, what is the name of the girl whose photograph you showed me?" A curious slight spasm of distaste flashed across Flynn's face. He shuddered. "I don't know," he replied.

"What is the name of the girl who escaped from San Quentin?"

"I don't know."

Stephen struck Flynn a smart slap on the top of the head. "Wake up," he commanded.

Flynn came awake instantly and looked extremely foolish. "Well, you didn't stand the test," Stephen assured him. "You were falling asleep, so I awakened you."

"Am I pretty bad, Doc?"

"You're this bad, that if you do not take treatment you will be in a bad way. I'll give you a prescription. Come and see me again."

"Thank you, Doc. You're mighty kind. Good Lord, Doc, am I going crazy? I don't remember why I called on you."

"You asked me to identify this passport photograph," and Stephen held out the little photo to Flynn, who thrust it away.

"That's bad luck, Doc. Never mind. It's a matter of no importance."

He picked up his hat, bade Stephen good night and left.

CHAPTER X

When the cablegram sent to Penelope Gatlin had been delivered for at least three days Dan McNamara telephoned Lanny to ask if the girl had answered. Upon being told she had not, he was so cast down that Lanny felt sorry for him. So, like all women who feel sorry for a man, she decided to feed him, and invited him for dinner that night. She said Stephen would be there.

"That's no inducement," McNamara rumbled, "but I'll come anyhow. Thanks."

McNamara's thoughts kept shuttling back to Penelope Gatlin all that busy day. Finally he telephoned Flynn to report to him.

"How about that Merton case I sent up to the chief of detectives recently?" he asked, when Flynn appeared. (McNamara hadn't sent the case up at all, but he knew Flynn did not know this.)

"Oh, yes," said Flynn, "I did some work on that but didn't get anywhere. I called on the Merton woman and tried to get her to identify the girl's photograph, but she wouldn't or couldn't."

"Did you get a line on the girl?"

"Sure. Traced her to an address in Paris."

"Under what name is she registered with the Paris police?"

"Chief, I can't just recall it."

"It was Penelope Gatlin, wasn't it?" Flynn flinched a little. "I don't know."

"You're as bad as Mrs. Merton. What's the matter with you?"

"I don't know, Chief. I think we might as well drop the case."

"Very well, then, forget it, Pat. I was mildly curious, that's all." He dismissed Flynn. "By Jupiter, that fellow's getting too deep for me!" he soliloquized. And he telephoned the captain of detectives. "What about that case of the lost Merton heiress?" he demanded.

"We've dropped it on Flynn's advice," McNamara grunted and hung up.

Lanny, wearing a kitchen apron, ceased cooking dinner long enough to let him in that night. Stephen had not yet arrived, so McNamara went out into the kitchen with Lanny, while he related the news regarding the common nuisance.

Lanny gazed upon him very benignly. "You're a good man, Dan McNamara. How come you've never married?"

"If I had, my mother would have lived with us," he declared. "How come you've never been married?"

Lanny sighed. "Nobody ever asked me."

McNamara sighed gustily. "My poor mother's very old and in bad health," he said.

"A man like you should have sons—fine, big, strapping, manly sons."

"How old are you, Lanny?"

"Forty-two."

"I'm forty-six myself." He sighed again. "You're a fine woman, Lanny—devil a finer. We might manage it."

"Manage what?"

"To put up with mother for the little time she has to live. God bless her."

"I never could stand a left-handed proposal, Dan." Lanny shook her head and gazed at him solemnly.

"Then here's my right hand on it, Lanny," and he laid his great right paw in hers. "If it's sons you'd have, you old darlin', 'tis little time we have to waste."

A faint flush came to Lanny's slightly faded cheeks. "What would Stevie do?"

"It's been my observation, Lanny, that a woman without something to occupy her mind is in a poor way. You could continue to look after the doctor's office."

"You've a good theory, Dan, but it lacks one ingredient."

"Name the lack and I'll get it."

"You're not in love with me."

"The h—! I'm not! You're like all the women—forever putting dogs in windows. I'm not used to passing words lightly on such a subject. Give me a yes or no answer."

"You great, lovable idiot!" Lanny yelled. Advancing swiftly upon the chief, she kissed his pompadour. "I'll risk your mother, Dan," she said softly. "All my life I've been looking for a man with a heart in his chest—and the day you first came into the office, with your big, swaggering way and your blarney and your air of owning the world, I—I wondered if you were married. I'm no longer young, Dan. I have peculiar ways and I'm bossy, too."

McNamara drew her face down and kissed it. "What a blessing I'm used to that, Lanny, and have learned to be kind to the aged. Here, quit pulling my hair, woman."

The door bell began ringing.

"What's wrong with you, Lanny?"

Stephen demanded when Lanny admitted him. "I rang half a dozen times."

"Do you good to wait once in a while," she snapped back at him.

"Mac," he declared, "you have a proprietary air about you."

"And well I may," McNamara replied pertly. "I've just popped the question to Lanny and we've agreed to jump over the broomstick together."

"I've been expecting this, Dan. She hasn't been worth a canceled postage stamp to me since she met you."

"But I'm not going to leave you, Stevie darling. Oh, I couldn't leave my boy!"

Stephen held out his arms and Lanny ran into them. And then Stephen warned Dan that if he wasn't good to Lanny he would hypnotize him, as he had hypnotized P. Flynn, and sell him the idea he was a pet poodle, so Lanny could kick him around at will.

"You what?" McNamara yelled.

"You put the comether on Flynn?"

"Certainly." And Stephen told him the story.

"Three hundred years ago, in Salem, Massachusetts," said Dan McNamara, "you would have been burned for a witch."

The door bell rang insistently. "Now, who can that be?" Lanny exploded.

Dan rolled out of the kitchen and down the hall. Then Stephen and Lanny heard the door slammed violently; there was a scuffle, and something crashed to the floor.

He came into the kitchen a moment later, leading by her handcuffed wrist none other than Penelope Gatlin. "She wouldn't kiss me first," he announced, "so I put the cuffs on her—the little vixen."

"Oh, Lanny, you darling! And Stevie, you sweetheart!" Penelope cried, and extended her manacled arms. Lanny dodged in under them and folded the girl to her heart. "You next, Stevie," Penelope ordered, and obediently Stephen lowered his head and the looped arms came around his neck and drew his face down. "And now, Dan," the girl cooed, and turned her face upward.

McNamara laughingly uncuffed her. "Why didn't you cable us?" Stephen demanded, a trifle severely.

"I adore surprises, that's why."

"Why did you come back?" McNamara demanded.

"The proper place to hide oneself is in the spot one is supposed to have fled from. Lanny, don't let them stand around staring at me and asking me questions," moaned Penelope. "I'm hungry and so tired. Can I have my same little bed tonight?"

"You can have anything and everything you want, my dear."

"I want Stephen," came the answer, faintly tired, and the girl went to him and leaned her sleek black head against his breast. "I've missed you so, Stephen."

Stephen held her close with his left arm, and his right hand came up and cautiously fingered her poor nose. "God's on our side, Lanny," he told his nurse. "Tomorrow I want you to arrange for a room in St. Dunstan's hospital. We'll get Boyd to operate."

"Please, Stephen, do I have to go away any more?" asked Nance.

"No, not any more, my dear."

"And you'll fix my nose? I wanted to have it done in Paris, but when you sent me that cablegram I couldn't, of course. Can I have just the nose I want, Stephen?"

"Yes, little wanderer. And when that's done you shall have the kind of home you want. You've been lost in the woods, poor babe, but I'll lead you out into the loveliest sunshiny meadow imaginable."

McNamara had, throughout this scene, felt a lump in his throat. He glanced at Lanny and saw the tears of sympathy in her brave, kindly eyes, so to avert a scene he growled huskily: "When do we eat?"

For the first time since Penelope Gatlin, alias Nance Belden, had come under his notice, Stephen Burt had a reasonable opportunity to examine the girl, when, following dinner at Lanny's house, Penelope, Lanny, Dan McNamara and Stephen retired to the drawing room. Despite the strain of her record-breaking journey from Europe, Penelope was not so tired that she wished to retire early. She joined in the general conversation, and Stephen noticed that she seemed inclined to be argumentative, but her arguments indicated no cogent thought; frequently she employed the patois of the underworld; her language was racy and idiomatic. He noticed that her laugh was sudden, loud—the laugh of a vulgarian. She was nervous; her hands twined and intertwined continuously, she moved about the room a great deal, and finally came to rest on Stephen's knees. She looked into his eyes searching for a long time and then said accusingly:

"You don't care for me."

"Why do you think that, Penelope?"

"Because nobody could love a girl with a nose like mine."

"Did you bring back the sketches that Parisian artist made of you?"

She bounced off his lap and hurried upstairs, to return presently with a portfolio filled with sketches. There was one crayon drawing of her as she was. A half dozen additional sketches were copies of the first, with the exception of the nose. The artist had fitted into her features a nose of his own design, and viewed in profile some of his creations lent to the girl's face an aspect of singular beauty and sweetness.

"I like this one best," Stephen decided. "The patrician nose does you justice. Going to come over tomorrow and give you the most searching physical examination you've ever had," he decided. He drew her over to him and kissed her on the cheek, paternally.

"You're a nice, sweet, lovable girl, Penelope," he assured her as if she were a little girl, "and the shape of your nose isn't taken into consideration by the sort of people whose love and approval you desire. And you can get along very well without the love and approval of any other sort. Dan and Lanny and I all love you and we want you to love us. We're your only real friends and you wouldn't do anything to hurt us, would you?"

"I'd rather die, Stephen."

"Fine. You're tired now, so suppose you run upstairs to bed, and tomorrow, when you wake up, you'll be refreshed and happy and we'll be able to discuss the making over of this poor nose. Kiss us all good night."

Penelope dutifully obeyed, and as she was starting up the stairs Stephen said: "And don't forget to say your prayers."

She grimaced disdainfully. "You must think I'm a nut—saying my prayers. I've been prayed to death."

"By whom?"

"I don't know, but by somebody. It makes me ill."

"That was the subconscious revulsion to her adopted mother coming out," Stephen told McNamara. "Mrs. Merton has a strong religious mania. That girl's a mighty healthy specimen," he continued. "I noticed, when I was dressing the wound in her shoulder, that her skin is soft and silky, not rough and dry, as in the case of psychopathic personalities. Everything about her seems to indicate sound ancestry, and I'm more than ever convinced that her mental disturbance is not organic. However, that's a lead we can run down after we've fixed her nose."

Character in the Signature

One's Written Name Discloses Personality When Placed on Letter or Document; Legibility First Thing to Be Given Consideration.

There is one thing which every person who can read and write should learn to do well, and that is to write his, or her, signature clearly and attractively. It is worth while to experiment in writing the name until it can be done in the best possible way. Then, when once you are satisfied you have found the right way, keep practicing it until it becomes a habit to write this particular form. Then this becomes your signature. It represents your personality when signed to letter, deed, etc. It does not vary in form, although ink and pen may be different. Of course, every one writes best with the accustomed style of pen, but the form of the signature remains the same, whatever the pen or whatever the ink, or pencil.

The first thing to strive for is legibility. Be assured that whoever sees your signature knows immediately what it spells. Let it stand distinctly for you, and it acquires an element of individuality. It has distinction as well as being distinct. It represents personality.

After legibility is assured, grace in letter formation is a desirable addition. Try to have all letters slant in parallel way whether back-hand, forward or upright. See that they are firmly set, not uncertainly. The stroke may be broad, as is usual with a stub pen, or delicate, as is equally usual with a fine spencerian pen. But it is not a matter of size of stroke but of certainty, of precision. A wavering handwriting indicates fear, weakness, or frailty. A sick or aged person whose strength is small cannot avoid uncertainty of line. The well and strong should not show signs of weakness in signatures, and most assuredly one does not wish to betray weakness of character in his very handwriting.

Try to make an attractive signature of the letters and words comprising your name. It no longer requires flourishes, as in old-time beautiful writing of names. Flourishes are out of style. Legibility, fine formation of letters and words, and good spacing of words comprising one's name are criterions of fine signatures. Children learn to write, but it is adults who perfect their own signatures. Banks and other firms with whom you do constant business get to know the signatures of their depositors and clients. It is a protection to have a representative signature. The better it is in appearance the more pleasing a personality it betokens.

TIRES MAY LOOK ALIKE ON THE OUTSIDE ON THE INSIDE THEY ARE DIFFERENT

HEAT on the inside created by friction is the main cause of blowouts. Firestone Tires are different on the inside—they are built with the patented extra process of Gum-Dipping that soaks every cord and insulates every strand with pure liquid rubber, preventing internal friction and heat. No other make of tire is Gum-Dipped.

Firestone performance records again emphasize the undisputed evidence that Firestone Tires are not only blowout-proof, but give greatest protection against skidding. There are three questions and answers that will solve the problem of what tires to buy:

QUESTION 1—"Will the tread give me the greatest traction and protection against skidding?"

ANSWER—Recent tests by a leading University show that Firestone High Speed Non-Skid Tires stop a car 15% quicker than any other of the leading makes. For eight consecutive years Firestone Tires have been on the winning car in the dangerous Pike's Peak Race where a skid means death. This is undisputed evidence that Firestone gives car owners greatest protection against skidding.

QUESTION 2—"Are they blowout-proof?"

ANSWER—Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires have the most amazing records for being blowout-proof of any tires ever built. In the gruelling 500-Mile Race at Indianapolis, May 30th, every one of the 33 cars was equipped with Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires. Not one of the 33 drivers had any tire trouble of any kind.

Ab Jenkins drove his 5,000 pound car on Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires over the hot salt beds of Utah, 3,000 miles at 127.2 miles per hour, with temperatures as high as 120°, without tire trouble of any kind. These are most amazing proofs of blowout protection ever known.

QUESTION 3—"Without sacrificing these two important safety features will they give me longer mileage, thus making them the most economical tires I can buy?"

ANSWER—Firestone High Speed Tires not only give you more than 50% longer wear, but also lowest cost per mile due to the tough, wear-resisting tread built with higher shoulders and a wider, flatter contour. This rugged tread is held securely to the Gum-Dipped cord body by Firestone's patented construction of two extra layers of cords under the tread, a special construction feature not used in any other tire. Unequaled mileage records by thousands of car owners add undisputed evidence of longer wear and greater economy of Firestone High Speed Tires

News From Springfield

By Bernice T. Van der Vries
Representative Seventh District

The Fifty-ninth General Assembly closed on Saturday evening amid the explosion of fireworks. Contrary to all expectations the adjournment took place in daylight hours, the House adjourning at 6:45 o'clock and the Senate twenty minutes later.

The last week was accompanied by the usual stunts of the lighthearted members such as the shooting of fireworks, wet sponges in the seats of oratorical members, cat calls and on the final day an introduction and a speech by a noted dancer of court fame during the Century of Progress.

The Fifty-ninth Assembly will be long remembered by the taxpayers of Illinois, who now feel overburdened. Taxes were increased and no efforts were made to cut governmental costs or to work out a more modern system of taxation for the state. The appropriations for the biennium are almost $400,000,000. Unless the Governor uses his veto power there will be funds spent in addition to those required by the regular departments for such projects as $25,000 for the erection of a monument to the memory of Henry T. Rainey, late speaker of the House of Representatives, $1,000,000 for the building of an armory in Springfield, and $500,000 for an archives building in Springfield.

The University of Illinois voted the appropriation asked by the Board of Trustees and upon which there was some disagreement with the Governor.

For the most part all of the appropriation bill were passed by the vote of the majority party. All efforts by the minority to obtain an itemized budget were in vain. The one increase in appropriations which received support from the Republicans and for which they worked vigorously was the increase of $5,000,000 in the State School Distributive fund for the biennium. This was a compromise measure to the extent that the $7,000,000 deficit was not appropriated, the $3,000,000 due down state counties to equalize the payments with Cook County and the $2,000,000 asked by the Chicago Board of Education to cover the excess cost of maintaining classes for delinquent, deaf, blind and crippled children were given up. It had appeared for a time that no increase in the distributive fund could be secured.

During the last week $45,000,000 was voted to maintain the relief work through the Illinois Emergency Relief Commission and $5,000,000 was the amount appropriated for the Old Age Pension System. The Old Age Pension Bills were signed by the Governor on Friday with the warning that the law would have to be worked over in a special session to be called in the Fall as the present law does not properly conform to the federal provisions. It is generally felt that the $5,000,000 appropriation will not be sufficient.

Automobilists were granted a 10% reduction in license fees if the bill is signed by the Governor. He opposed the cut which was sponsored by Secretary of State Hughes.

A bill which passed the House at midnight Friday evening was Senate Bill 481. This bill abolished the offices of precinct committeemen in Cook County and substituted one committeeman for each township, to be elected every four years. This measure was fought on the floor of the House by Representatives Foster, Slater and Van der Vries. It was easily passed by the votes of the majority party. There is considerable controversy as to the wisdom of the change. Time alone will tell. However there is justification for the feeling that such a decided change in election policies should have been a matter for daylight legislation. For the Seventh District it means the elimination of about 900 precinct committeemen in the party machinery of the two parties.

Important legislation which fell by the wayside were the motor drivers license, the insurance code and the criminal code. Six months were consumed in the passage of about four hundred bills. It was a half year of bitter fighting and partisan lines were sharply drawn on non partisan subjects. The session will be impressed upon the citizens when they pay the three per cent sales tax and with every tiny token given for a loaf of bread there will come the realization that government is expensive.

Mrs. J. S. Oulman has organized a girl's club of about 20 young girls from 9 to 15 years of age and will teach them sewing, crocheting and other works of art. They voted to go by the name of "Sunshine Sewing Circle." She will teach the names of all kinds of material, how to know them, also to do embroidery. The dues are 5c a month. Later they plan to make and donate articles of clothing to some needy children or orphanage. They elected the following girls for officers for six months: President, Dorothy Campbell; Vice President, Marie Bettenhausen; Secretary, Mary Price; Treasurer, Velma Lorenze.

Mokena Has Revenge

By Williams

Boy! Revenge is sweet, and how!

The Aces took the Symerton gang to camp Sunday beating them 7 to 2.

The boys were out for blood and they sure got it. Wes walked the first man up. Long got on base on a fielder's choice, Adams did the same, meantime Schuttout was caught off second, forcing Long. Oberlin played out, McGovney to Mueller.

Marti was first up for Mokena starting off with a double, George popped up, Bill played out to the pitcher; Mac was next up getting a nice single to score Marti, Chuck was next with a hit, then Harold went down swinging.

Mokena scored 1 in the 1st, 3 in the 2nd, and 3 in the 4th; Symerton scored 1 in the 5th and 1 in the 7th.

The boys were doubtful at first about playing the game as Symerton's team was only half there, but finally at 3 o'clock they arrived and me thinks they wished they hadn't.

Emil Erick Lindgren, sixty-six years old, former mayor of Batavia and for 15 years owner of the Lindgren foundry there, died at his home.

Faced with separation from his family of eight motherless children, John Hanley, relief client, hanged himself in Iroquois county jail at Sheldon.

John Eddy, eighty-three, for many years a prominent business man of Bloomington, one time postmaster and second president of the Association of Commerce, died in Albany, N. Y.

Although opposed by the state highway department, a measure giving cities complete control over the expenditure of their share of the motor fuel tax was approved by the house.

Mildred M. Hallmark, nineteen-year-old daughter of a Peoria tool-maker, was found beaten to death in a small creek in Springdale cemetery. All the clothing had been stripped from her body and physicians said she had been assaulted.

Samuel G. Crawford, eighty-two, who founded the Lohrville (Iowa) bank in 1882 and was president of the Iowa State Association of Shorthorn Breeders many years previous to 1905, died in Sterling. He was born in a log cabin near that city.

A. C. Birks, seventy, of Harristown, was drowned when his automobile crashed through a culvert and overturned in a roadside ditch in four feet of water. Birks was trapped in the car, but his wife was thrown clear and escaped with minor injuries.

One woman was seriously burned when an explosion wrecked a tire shop in Springfield with damage estimated at $5,000. Mrs. Hattie Saxer, a state employee, was injured as she was passing the building. Mrs. Marcella Coffey, whose desk was over the explosion, fell into the basement, unhurt.

Hundreds of villages and farmers in and near Gardner, in Grundy county, 30 miles southwest of Joliet, were routed by a freak flood. The flood followed extraordinarily heavy rains. Of such volume was the deluge that ordinary drainage courses failed. As the waters began inundating Gardner, whistles and church bells roused the 800 residents of the sleeping village.

Preparatory to conducting Red Cross first aid courses for all state highway police and engineers, one patrolman and one engineer from each of the ten highway districts in Illinois met in Springfield for a five-day instructors' course in the work. Mike Tomso, state police officer from the Mount Olive branch, conducted the training school, with the co-operation of the state department of mines and miners, which furnished material for demonstrations.

Offering intensive courses in all phases of homemaking, the Nora Dunlap School for Homemakers from July 30 to August 7 and the State Fair School of Domestic Science from August 9 to 23 were announced as features of the Illinois state fair. Both schools, the former for older women and the latter for young girls, will be held in the woman's building on the fair grounds. Tuition, which covers the cost of lodging and food, for the Nora Dunlap school is $7 and for the Domestic Science school, $12. Application blanks and detailed information may be obtained from Mrs. Anita Shanley, Capitol building, Springfield.

The City of Des Plaines is celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of its founding this week, with the crowning of Miss Des Plaines (Miss Marion Toepper), chosen by popular vote; a parade of decorated and historical floats, a pageant depicting the history of the city from its earliest days to its present day life, an old-fiddlers' contest, an old-time muzzle-loading rifle and pistol contest, a kiddies' pet and costume parade, an old settlers' dinner, a centennial ball and home coming services in the churches, Sunday, June 30, which concludes the Centennial celebration. Business houses and streets are in gala attire. The city is thronged with visitors from far and near, eager to help the community celebrate its one hundredth birthday.

Elgin's centennial celebration opened with a colorful parade watched by a crowd estimated at 25,000. Mayor Myron M. Lehman led the parade on horseback dressed as Chief Wabonsonie of the Pottawatomie tribe, who was a friend of the white men when the community was settled in 1835. Following were many covered wagons driven by Elgin residents dressed in the garb of three generations ago. One of the wagons was drawn by a team of oxen. Old surreys and buggies, a stage coach and ancient automobiles with the chauffeurs wearing the old dusters and veils, were part of the long procession. The drum and bugle corps of the Elgin post of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and the women's auxiliary drill team of the same organization, the American Legion post, Spanish war veterans, and Boy Scouts were in the parade.

Adolphus P. Wolf, ninety-four, retired vice president of the Bank of Edwardsville, and believed to be the oldest native resident and last Civil war veteran there, is dead. He was attending school in Philadelphia when the Civil war started. He served throughout the war.

James E. Sweeney, seventy-six, retired supervisor of tracks for the Chicago & Eastern Illinois railroad, died of a heart ailment at his home north-east of Fairland. Sweeney began his services for the Chicago & Eastern Illinois Railroad company 52 years ago as a section laborer.

Where the President Does His Dirt Farming

PRESIDENT Roosevelt is in a way a real dirt farmer. He spent his childhood, as did his father and his grandfather, on the 1,000 acre farm at Hyde Park, N. This recently taken photograph shows a part of the truck farm. The superintendent of the Hyde Park farm is William Plog, who has been in the employ of the Roosevelts for many years.

BUSTER BEAR IS HUNGRY

BUSTER BEAR was hungry. There wasn't any doubt about that. Danny Meadow Mouse, watching from his hiding place under a little pile of brown leaves in the Green Forest, didn't have to be told that. He had only to watch Buster raking over the leaves on the ground, sniffing among them as he did so, to know that Buster was hungry. What he was hunting for Danny didn't know, but he did know that if a hungry Bear should find a fat Meadow Mouse, well, in about two winks that Bear would be a little less hungry. Knowing that didn't make Danny feel any more comfortable. No, sree, it didn't.

"Oh, dear! Oh, dear me! Whatever did I leave the Green Meadows for?" Danny asked himself over and over as one little chill chased another little chill all over him. "If I ever get back there I'll never, never, go so far away from home again. I never will, I never will," he repeated over and over to himself.

All the time he sat perfectly still. He wouldn't have breathed if he could have helped it, but of course he had to do that. And all the time he kept his bright little eyes fixed on the great black form of Buster Bear as Buster wandered this way and that way in the moonlight sifting down through the tree tops. Perhaps he would have felt a wee bit easier had he known what it was Buster was looking for among the brown leaves. Buster was hunting for beechnuts, of which he is very fond.

But Danny didn't know this. You see, Danny knew very little about Buster Bear. "He's looking for Mice. That's what he's looking for. He must have found out from Billy Mink or some one that I am over here, and he's looking for me," thought Danny, and the little chills chased each other all over him faster than ever. You see, he was so frightened that he didn't stop to really think.

Sometimes Buster would go off to one side until Danny couldn't see him among the trees, and he would begin to hope. But if he couldn't see Buster he could hear Buster's great claws raking and raking over the leaves, and it seemed to him the most awful sound he ever had heard. Then Buster would come back in his direction and the little chills would make Danny shake so that his teeth chattered. Danny Meadow Mouse was frightened. Yes, indeed, Danny Meadow Mouse was very much frightened.

At last, Buster Bear, having raked over all the leaves all about, looked straight at the little pile under which

QUESTION BOX
by ED WYNN, The Perfect Fool

Dear Mr. Wynn:

My father gave me a new gun for my birthday. I want to use it right away as my vacation starts next week. I am thinking of going to the woods in Pennsylvania. Is the hunting good there?

Sincerely,
IKE N. SHOOT.

Answer: It sure is. In fact, it is better than the finding, but not as good as the voting.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

I am the father of a girl nineteen years of age. I do not permit her to stay out at night, but allow her to have her boy friends at home. There is one boy who comes to see her every night. For two months my gas bills have been very large, but this month the bill is very small. The same boy comes to see my daughter, so how do you account for the difference in bills?

Sincerely,
SIM PILLTON.

Answer: There're engaged now.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

This afternoon, as I was looking out my back window, I saw an old hen of mine eating a lot of ticks. What did she do that for and what shall I do about it?

Yours truly,
CHICK N. FEEDER.

Answer: Don't do anything about it; just watch her, maybe she is going to lay a carpet.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

I am a boy eighteen years of age and my ambition is to be a detective.

Danny was hiding and Danny felt sure that Buster was looking right at him. Then Buster began to walk straight toward that little pile of leaves and Danny Meadow Mouse.

The Kitchen Table

By ANNE CAMPBELL

SHE sits with heavy heart, and watchful eyes—
An angel banished from her Paradise.
The sale proceeds . . . Her treasures one by one.
Are purchased for a song by kindly neighbors.
She sees the couch go, where her oldest son
Lay till released from earth's purposeful labors.
There is a chair, a chest of drawers. . . . Unable To buy, she longs most for the kitchen table.

For it was at the kitchen table she was blessed most by her home's tranquility;
Here she has bent, and rolled the flaky crust
For pies, and stirred up cakes and cookies . . . Here
Many a hasty luncheon has been thrust
Down eager throats . . . Speech, intimate and dear,
Took place around this table made of pine,
So homely was its use—but half divine!

For finer treasure cannot stir her thought
As this does . . . All the furniture she bought Long, long ago is carried from the door.
She does not grieve for it. . . . Her dreams remain Around a kitchen table, where once more
The children gather, doing sums again . . .
And she, engrossed in happy memory,
Smiles at her husband o'er a cup of tea.

SPRING DISHES

WITH the delicious rhubarb, fresh from the garden, one has the best of spring tonics. Cut it into half-inch lengths without peeling and put to bake in a baking dish with sugar to sweeten. Remove from the oven when tender and serve either hot or cold.

Rhubarb Vanity.

Wash and cut the rhubarb without peeling into half-inch pieces, place in a baking dish, adding one cupful of sugar to a pound of rhubarb. Cook covered, over low-heat until the juices flow, then uncover and cook until thick. By adding the sugar after the rhubarb is nearly done it will save constant watching. Cool and fold in two well beaten egg whites and three-fourths of a cupful of freshly shredded coconut. Chill before serving with a thin custard, using the yolks of the eggs and one cupful of milk and sugar to sweeten.

Rhubarb Betty.

Melt two tablespoonfuls of butter and add two cupfuls of bread crumbs, mix with one cupful of sugar, one-fourth teaspoonful each of cinnamon and nutmeg, the grated rind of an orange and one cupful of fresh grated coconut or one package of coconut. Place the mixture in layers with three cupfuls of rhubarb, using the juice of the orange sprinkled over the fruit. Cover with buttered crumbs and bake 45 minutes closely covered. Uncover and brown. Serve plain or with a hard sauce or a foamy egg sauce.

DUTCH-IRISH MYSTERY

FORT Collins, Colo., was really a fort in early days, and the soldiers of that era were much like those of today—intensely interested in the curious happenings that came to their attention.

So, when an Irishman and a Dutchman came to Fort Collins with a load of gold and proceeded to go on a lively spree, the soldiers noticed it, and when this was repeated several times they began to wish that they knew the source of all this wealth. They even went so far as to hire an Indian to follow the pair on their next trip out.

One day the partners set out up the Cache-la-Poudre, and their red shadow lurked behind just out of sight. The Indian had made one mistake—he had not figured on a long journey, hence had not taken much in the way of provisions with him. After three days, the smell from his quarry's campfire grew to be entirely too tantalizing; the Indian took time out to hunt a deer and prepare a square meal for himself, and while he was following this new trail a deep snow fell, blotting out all signs of the two miners. He was unable to follow them farther.

On a later visit to Fort Collins, the odd pair invested in a burro to carry their packs, and a little later they disposed of the small beast and bought an ox. Apparently, business was good. Then, one day, they came in on foot, tired and disgruntled, and said that a bear had killed the ox.

It was during this visit that the Irish and Dutch temperaments began to pall on each other. The two had quarreled before, and had got over it, but now a real battle took place. In the heat of the moment all past friendship was forgotten, and each man tried to kill the other. The Irishman was the stronger of the two—the Dutchman went down, and died as a result of his wounds.

Now was a splendid chance for the soldiers to satisfy their curiosity, and they grasped it eagerly. The Irishman was a murderer, and must be punished—unless he might be persuaded to tell the secret source of the gold. With a rope around his neck, he was hanged by the men in uniform. Here was his only chance to live; would he take it? Tell his secret and go free—or refuse, and be hung for murder!

Perhaps the prisoner felt that he could out-bluff his captors. No, he shouted, he would tell nothing! He would die rather than let them know the source of his gold!

"Let's hang him a little, boys—give him the feel of the rope. Maybe that will loosen his tongue," was the suggestion, and the unfortunate Irishman was hoisted into the air. "Now let him down," and the rope was slackened. But the experiment failed: excitement, fear, and rough handling had proved too much, and the Irishman was dead.

Billy Mellins left Nebraska in 1889 and went to Fort Collins to haul lumber for a sawmill on the Cache la Poudre. He often stopped at a mining camp, halfway on his route, called Manhattan. One Saturday night he heard that some tourists were anxious about their son, who had ridden away on his pony and had not come back. Mellins joined in an unsuccessful search, but the lad showed up next day, and he had a strange story to tell.

He had become confused the afternoon before, he said, and when his pony started to follow an old trail near nightfall, he was glad enough to give the animal its head. The trail led to a deserted cabin, where the bones of an ox lay before the door, and some specimens of ore sat on a shelf inside.

Mellins was interested. This must be the lost mine that the Irishman and the Dutchman had worked. He found an old prospector, a half-crazy soul whose mind had gone wandering out into the mountains, and the two set out to find the cabin, guided by the boy's story.

Sure enough, the cabin was there as he had said, and a dim trail—evidently the trail to the mine—led back up the canyon. The old prospector lost all sanity at the sight. He rushed up the path, and Mellins hurried after, in time to see him dash into a tunnel and almost immediately dash out again, followed by a bear! The crazy prospector was wild with rage. In his fury, he leaped at Mellins, and it was all the younger man could do to protect himself and get the old fellow back to camp. After that Mellins made no more trips in search of treasure.

Previous to this time there had been a large number of murders on the old Overland trail. Men returning from California, bringing sacks of gold "to show the folks back East," had been waylaid and killed, and their valuables taken. The criminals had never been caught.

But, with the death of the quarrelsome partners, the depredations ceased. Some one who had a mind for adding two and two, began to investigate, and this is what he learned:

There never was a mine. The boy and his pony, and Billy Mellins and his crazy prospector, either told fables or were part of the legend themselves. For the source of the Dutch-Irish gold was in no Colorado ore, but in the pockets of the murdered travelers.

CONQUERED

By R. H. WILKINSON
© Bell Syndicate.—WNU Service.

QUESTS at the Alpine House were thrilled when Neal Leonard and his party arrived for the climbing season. Leonard was rated among the most accomplished climbers of the day. And every one knew that the veteran's heart was set on conquering Mount Glacier.

No living man had ever reached Glacier's lofty summit. It was one of the few remaining ascents that still held out an insuperable defense to the strength and endurance of man.

One after another of the world's greatest pinnacles had succumbed to the skill and perseverance of the great Leonard. Lesser peaks, they were, but testing his skill and that of others to the utmost. And now Mount Glacier! Hundreds of others had failed. It had been said that no living man would ever reach its summit. And yet to accomplish that very end had become an obsession with Neal Leonard. It meant the crowning achievement of his career.

There were three in Leonard's party—Turner Cameron, who had scaled the most precipitous trail up the Matterhorn in record time; Oris Markham, whose name was a byword of achievement among mountain climbers of the Alps, and Leonard himself. Both Cameron and Markham were comparatively young. They were not as sober and concerned about the success of the attempt as was their leader. To them it was a glorious adventure; to Leonard the accomplishment of a burning ambition.

The trio set out early one morning in late spring, following a farewell party sponsored by guests at the Alpine House as tribute to the three daring men. It took the party a week to reach Glacier's base; a week of climbing that would have taxed the skill of unladen men, let alone these three who were forced to struggle over lesser ridges, each bearing on his back a minimum of 40 pounds of food and equipment.

Leonard had chosen his companions with foresight. When the base camp was established, both Markham and Cameron were as eager for the ascent as when they started. The discomfiture of the week's "preparatory" work had not discouraged them in the slightest.

Following a day's rest, the party awoke before daylight and prepared to make their first ascent—the south wall. At the first flush of dawn they set out. Roped together, with Leonard in the lead, they made quick time over the comparatively easy southern defense. Once atop the wall they rested, ate and began climbing again by two in the afternoon. High above them towered the cone-shaped summit.

Their present encumbrance was a mob known as the Camel's Hump. At first the slope was easy; the snow well packed for climbing purposes. But by late afternoon, with the hump's top still a good hour away, the trail became more precipitous. The slope shot upward at a dangerous angle.

Leonard kept in the lead, digging out footholds with his ax with studious care. He surmounted one ledge after another, gave his companions the advantage of a tight rope whenever possible, and finally, just as daylight began to fade, reached the top of the final ledge, and halted.

They made camp on the wind-blown summit of the Camel's Hump and went immediately to bed.

At dawn they were up and ready to begin again. Caching a quantity of their food supply, they began at once the ascent of the dangerous Pulpit Rock. The rock presented the first real difficulties of the climb. It was accomplished by hitching the body up through a series of chimneys—narrow crevices with an almost perpendicular climb. Leonard, as usual in the lead, reached the last chimney's top at 1:30 in the afternoon. Below him his companions were obscured from view by an angle of rock.

Alone, with a hundred miles an hour wind threatening at any moment to unseat him from his precarious perch, the veteran confronted and overcame one of the most hazardous of all ascents.

At the chimney's top a flat slab of rock, smooth as glass, sloped upward at a nearly perpendicular angle for a distance of 15 feet. A barely visible crack, not large enough for a man to insert in it his finger tips, extended the length of the slab. It looked impossible, but Leonard knew it had to be done.

Inserting the point of his climbing ax in the crack and making it secure by twisting the handle outward, he hoisted up his body, clung to the sheer face of the slab for a breathless instant while he loosened the point and repeated the maneuver, and again pulled himself up. In this manner, miraculously, he reached the ledge above. When his two companions arrived at the chimney's top, they ascended the slab easily with the help of Leonard's tight rope.

That night the party camped on a ledge scarcely wide enough for all three of them to lay down side by side. Directly beneath them was a drop of some thousands of feet. Above, the summit was scarcely 700 feet away, a good half mile of climbing. The temperature was far below freezing. The air had become light and was difficult to breathe. Every step during the past three or four hours of climbing had been torture, lung-racking. A rest was required every few feet.

Leonard's eyes began to burn with a strange light. No man had yet reached the height to which the three had ascended. The summit, realization of a lifetime of dreaming, was in their grasp.

As usual they were up before dawn, and at the faintest hint of daylight had begun the climb. Progress was snail-like, every foot gained meant a tremendous struggle. A slip now would mean destruction to all three, so precarious were footholds. By noon they had accomplished but a scant 200 feet. An hour later a heavy mist enshrouded them. Leonard knew the signs, and great as was his eagerness, he was not a fool. He led his companions back to the upper camp, and for two days they remained inside the shroud of a tent that was their camp, while a fierce storm raged without.

On the third day it cleared, and again they attempted to gain the summit. But again a storm overtook them and they were forced to retreat.

That night they held a conference. It was, they agreed, an impossibility for all three to gain the summit. Some one must be left behind. Another camp would have to be established further up, and it would be out of the question to transport enough food and equipment for three.

Cameron and Markham were younger. They realized that if the thing could be done, it would fall to them. And yet they hesitated, knowing the obsession that fairly haunted the mind of Neal Leonard.

Leonard was silent for a long time. But at last he looked into the eyes of his two youthful companions and nodded. The two youths carried a memory of that look for many a year afterward.

Early the next morning Cameron and Markham started out. All day long Leonard waited in the camp below with his thoughts. At dusk the two youths returned. It was impossible, they said, to gain the summit. An insurmountable overhanging ledge jutted out and prevented progress from all angles.

Leonard listened to the pair and said nothing. The next morning he announced he was going to attempt the ascent alone. Markham and Cameron tried to dissuade him, but the old veteran was obstinate. He departed with his companion's pleas still ringing in his ears.

At night their companion had not returned, and Markham and Cameron fell into a doze. By noon of the next day they began to lose hope. By mid-afternoon they knew that no living thing would have been able to withstand the ravages of exposure for so long a period.

They held on for another day, however, and then descended to the next camp. Here they waited three days more and then sorrowfully began fighting their way downward.

That was the last time Neal Leonard has ever been seen. The following spring two aviators announced their intention of flying over Glacier's summit, no small feat in itself. And in May of the same year the act was accomplished.

Among other things the aviators reported seeing something that looked like a torn piece of jacket plastered against a tiny mound on the summit. Markham and Cameron, both of whom heard the announcement, exchanged startled glances. And, then, joyfully, they knew. Old Neal Leonard had realized his ambition. Mount Glacier had been conquered!

Road Builders in Italy

Find Triumph Arch Ruin

Many of the numerous triumphal arches have disappeared long ago. Among them was that of Diocletian. It was erected on the Via Flaminia, one of the main streets of the present-day city, writes a Rome United Press correspondent.

The arch of Diocletian was standing in the early Middle Ages and some of its ruins survived until the Renaissance, when they were destroyed to make room for the Church of Santa Maria in Via Lata, which then was rebuilt. Some of the marble fragments belonging to the arch then were removed to the Villa Medici, now the French Academy, where they still are preserved.

In the course of road improvement work now undertaken on this site, at a depth five meters below the level of the modern street, further marble fragments of the arch were discovered. The recovery of remaining ones still buried under the foundations of modern buildings is being attempted.

The fragments so far unearthed consist of portions of the cornice, vaulting and bas-reliefs decorating the arch of Diocletian. The bas-reliefs represent the incomplete figure of a winged victory and historical scene with a male head crowned with a laurel wreath.

Recovered Eyesight Disappointing

Occasionally persons who regain their eyesight after having been blind from infancy are greatly disillusioned and disappointed. Some dislike human faces, while others can no longer bear to touch objects they have used for years, or cannot continue to eat certain foods because of their appearance. A few even regret that they can see again.—Collier's Weekly.

Mails Delayed

The Thirteenth, Fourteenth and Fifteenth amendments to the United States Constitution were submitted to the states at the close of the Civil war. Delaware turned down all three but 36 years later, in 1901, reconsidered and passed them. Thirty-four years after ratification, the State department at Washington was notified of that action by Delaware's secretary of state. No explanation of the delay was made.

Washington.—President Roosevelt took the country by surprise when he suddenly dispatched a message to Congress asking for a new tax law that would have the same effect, although in a limited scope, of the "share-the-wealth" program advanced by Senator Huey Long and Father Coughlin, the radio priest. It may be said that the President not only surprised but stunned Congress by the proposal. It was a move concerning which there has been no forecast and it has taken some research to show how it links with other New Deal reform plans. But a link does exist. Of that there can be no doubt.

Plan to Soak the Rich

Succinctly, Mr. Roosevelt has demanded that Congress enact a tax law that will yield, according to estimate, something like $1,000,000,000 annually. It is designed to place the heaviest drain on the rich, whether they be rich corporations or rich individuals. In terms, the President observed that it was a program to tax "static wealth" and increase purchasing power of those not blessed with this world's goods.

The key to the program is the tax on inheritances and gifts. These two taxes must operate jointly if they are to succeed at all. If an individual of wealth wants to avoid already heavy inheritance taxes, he has only to give away his property before his death. In the new Roosevelt proposal, those who receive these gifts would have to pay a tax upon them as they would on any other income. There is a question as to its constitutionality but many able lawyers believe the gift tax will be sustained by the Supreme court.

The second phase of the new tax bill boosts rates of taxes on incomes. At present, the individual with an income of $1,000,000 is taxed at exactly the same rate as the individual having an income of $5,000,000. Of course, the $5,000,000 income pays more total tax but the point is the rate is the same as on the smaller income. Mr. Roosevelt proposes that the rate should be gradually increased above $1,000,000 just as it is graduated from the lowest income taxpayer to those receiving $1,000,000 annually. There seems to be little opposition to this particular item in the bill although it is natural to expect that attempts will be made to alter that suggestion since there is a school of economic thought which insists that tax rates can be high enough to discourage investments bringing a return to the individual of a size large enough for the government to take the bulk of that income.

The third major item in the President's program provides for a graduated tax on incomes of corporations. Corporations now are taxed at the rate of 13½ per cent of their net income whatever it may be. Mr. Roosevelt thinks this basis is improper. He proposes to have smaller corporations pay only 10½ per cent and that, as the capital of the corporations increase, they be subjected to a gradually higher rate until a top of 16½ is applied on the incomes of the largest corporations. Certain modifications or classifications were offered in this connection so that some types of corporations may not be compelled to pay the maximum rate.

The President's program for new taxes was received without particular enthusiasm in Congress except for a loud "Amen" by Senator Long. Indeed, the President's message was right down Senator Long's alley. The Louisiana senator has made hundreds of speeches advocating some parts of the proposal now offered by the Chief Executive.

Congressional reaction to the President's message included more groans than applause. A political campaign is due next year. Democratic leaders in many instances face re-election. It does not require the services of a soothsayer to tell you that new taxes are hard for a political candidate to defend.

Superficially, therefore, it would seem that Mr. Roosevelt was playing bad politics when he proposed a tax bill at this time. Such is not the case. Editorial conclusions by dozens of newspapers which understand the political situation in this country at this time are unanimous in terming it a political maneuver. Their conclusions are based on the fact that a candidate seeking political office can go out and say to people of small incomes: "Look what we are doing to the rich." Thus it is made to appear that a new wave of soak-the-rich propaganda is about to engulf us.

Business interests naturally are alarmed over the prospects. Thousands of corporations have barely been able to make ends meet in these depression years. Now that there is a prospect for some additional business and meager profits, they are confronted with a Washington program of taxation designed to go beyond the present tax burden.

It is true that some of them will be benefited by lower rates but many economists are of the opinion that these corporations receiving the benefit of lower rates actually are in the best financial condition of any in the country. Contrary to the argument often heard, the truth seems to be that the smaller business entities have come through the depression much better than those units with great investments and great capital funds. The answer lies in the fact that in the case of the smaller corporations, the stock usually is closely held and they are units for the most part individually managed. In the case of the larger corporations thousands of stock holders have a voice in selection of the corporate management and this management cannot be half as flexible as in instances where the word or direction of one man is controlling. In addition, small corporations are not subjected to great overhead expenses like the larger business bodies. The large corporation must maintain its organization and cannot even when work is slack cut down its fixed charges such as interest on debt and plant operation to the same extent. So, there are many who believe the high rate of tax becomes a penalty, the main object of which is to break up large corporations into smaller business units.

The Republican national committee is sitting virtually asleep in its easy chair, but Mr. Roosevelt's recent challenge of Supreme court decisions and his demand for constitutional revision is not being allowed to die. Everywhere around Washington, opponents of the New Deal are making attempts to keep that issue alive. Their claim is that Mr. Roosevelt put himself on a political hook when he offered criticism of the Supreme court, a co-ordinate branch of the government. They are determined to keep him on that hook if they can.

It is interesting to note how Mr. Roosevelt, observing a bad reaction to his initial statements concerning the NRA decision, has maintained silence on the point since. It is equally interesting to note how some of his mainstays and advisers have kept the issue bobbing up here and there throughout the country. Such men as Senator Robinson of Arkansas, senate majority leader, and Senator Byrnes of South Carolina, probably the President's closest friend in the senate, have made speeches lately using much the same tone and language as did the President in that memorable press conference. Every other administration spokesman has done the same thing. These speeches together with the continual jabbing and poking by New Deal opponents are serving to keep the question before the country. New Deal opponents frankly are joyful at the opportunity they say the President provided them.

In the meanwhile, as said above, the Republican national committee has been doing next to nothing. The condition is serving to build a fire under Henry P. Fletcher, chairman of the national committee, and is drawing criticism as well to Senator Hastings of Delaware, and Representative Bolton of Ohio, joint chairmen of the senatorial congressional committee. Some Republicans are saying that the Roosevelt opposition is being allowed to wander without guide or anchor and that a golden chance to gain important results is being wholly wasted, because of the inactivity of these two committees.

Considerable discussion is being heard these days concerning the necessity for getting new blood into the national organization and its headquarters. My own conviction is that Mr. Fletcher is due to go before long. He has failed to win the confidence of the several factions in the Republican party and has operated on a distinctly do-nothing basis. Neither Senator Hastings nor Representative Bolton has set the world afire with political initiative or use of political opportunity available to them. The question naturally then is asked: How can the Republicans and the New Deal opposition generally expect to defeat Mr. Roosevelt for re-election in 1936 unless virility is shown in the party leadership?

An old tale about the Blue Eagle has just come to light. It was not disclosed until after the Blue Eagle had been buried under the avalanche of a Supreme court decision holding NRA codes unconstitutional. The story involves the patenting of the design. Artists conceived the Blue Eagle as the NRA insignia. To protect it and prevent unauthorized use of the insignia the design was rushed through the United States patent office. The design was then turned over to an artist at the patent office with instructions to make the necessary prints required by law. He had proceeded only for a brief period on the work when he left his desk to notify the commissioner of patents of what he deemed to be a mistake in the design. His words were prophetic. He called attention to the fact that one wing of the Blue Eagle contained more feathers than the other and added:

"Any bird built like that can only fly in a circle."

To shorten the narrative, let it be said that the artist was directed to proceed with his work. And let it be added, the Blue Eagle did fly only in a circle.

Lesson for July 7

MOSES (LEADER AND LAWGIVER)

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 24:3-8, 12-13.
GOLDEN TEXT—Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord.—Psalm 33:12a.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Moses Brings a Message From God.
JUNIOR TOPIC—The Laws God Gave His People.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What It Means to Be a Patriot.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Religion in National Life.

I. Moses Prepared (Exod. 2:1-22).
1. His birth (vv. 1, 2).

Both his father and mother were of Levitical stock. At Moses' birth his mother was assured that he was to be the deliverer of the chosen people, and she was confident that God would somehow save him from the hand of the cruel king.

2. His preservation (vv. 3, 4). While his mother had faith, she did not ignore the proper use of means. Perhaps the story of how Noah and his family were saved suggested the expedient of the ark of bulrushes.

3. His education (vv. 5-10). Moses was educated first at his mother's knee. Here his mind was filled with the Word of God and acquainted with the Jewish hopes and prospects. He was further educated at the Egyptian court where he became acquainted with all the wisdom of the Egyptians.

4. His exile and marriage (vv. 11-22). Moses was obliged to take his flight from Egypt at the age of forty years because he prematurely attempted to enter upon his work as the deliverer of his people (Acts 7:25). While in exile, God taught him and qualified him for his work. During this time of rejection he secured a bride from among the Gentiles. Jesus Christ, his great antitype, while now in the place of rejection by his brethren, is getting a bride, his Church, from among the Gentiles.

II. Moses Called to Deliver His People (Exod. 3:1-14).

1. The Lord spoke from the burning bush (vv. 1-6). It was while keeping the flock of his father-in-law in the desert that the Lord appeared to Moses in the burning bush, which symbolized the indestructible people of God.

2. Moses commissioned (vv. 7-10). In this commission God showed his active interest in his people. He assured Moses that he had seen their affliction and heard their cry. It was because of his grace that he obligated himself to deliver the people.

3. Moses' objections removed (vv. 11-14). Four objections were offered, each one of which God met and removed.

a. Personal unworthiness (v. 11). b. The difficulty of the people to understand Moses' relationship to God (vv. 13, 14). c. Unbelief on the part of the people (4:1). d. Lack of eloquence (4:10).

III. Moses the Deliverer.

1. From Egyptian bondage (Exod. 12:29-30). The culminating blow was the death of the first-born. There was death that night in every home through Egypt where the blood was not found. This is typical of the coming day of God's wrath when all who are not resting under the shadow of Christ's blood shall perish.

2. At the Red Sea (Exod. 14:1-3). Hemmed in on either side by mountains, the Red sea in front, and pursued by the Egyptians from the rear, God interposed, enabling the Israelites to cross dry shoal.

IV. The Giving of the Law (Exod. 19:24).

1. The covenant proposed (ch. 19). This is the beginning of the theocratic kingdom. The Lord through Moses proposed to the people that on condition of their obedience he would constitute them his peculiar people (vv. 5, 6). To this the people heartily responded, engaging themselves to obey him (v. 8).

2. The content of the covenant (ch. 20). This embraces the Decalogue or Ten Commandments, setting forth obligation Godward and manward.

3. The Statutes of Moses or Secondary Laws (chs. 21-23). These laws pertain to a. Servitude (21:2-11); b. Personal safety (21:12-32); c. Property (21:33-22:15); d. Conjugal fidelity (22:16, 17); e. Miscellaneous laws (23:1-9); f. Set times of Jehovah (23:10-19); g. Personal piety (23:20-23).

4. The covenant ratified (Exod. 24). When the law had been duly set forth, the people were called upon to accept its obligations. The law was reduced to writing. The people were then called upon to commit themselves to personal acceptance of their responsibility. The covenant was then sealed by blood.

Secret of Happiness

"The real secret of happiness is to be in love with your job; to do work that you like to do; that interests you; that you believe in." That is, let us add, not only the secret of happiness, but the secret of success.

Revenge

We cannot honor our country with too deep a reverence; we cannot love her with an affection too pure and fervent; we cannot serve her with an energy of purpose or a faithfulness of zeal too steadfast and ardent.

Pontine marshes form a part of the tween Rome and the coast. Efforts have been made to drain the district, but without much success, and at the present time the district is used al-

NEWS-WEEK is a weekly newspaper published in the form of a magazine; a news-magazine.
It operates like a great daily newspaper; it is served by more than five thousand correspondents in the strategic news-centers of the world; its teletypes are fed twenty hours
a day by radio, by cable,
by wire.
Yet it functions in a way difficult in the daily presentation of news; it incorporates in its treatment of events a background of fact possible only through remorseless research on innumerable fronts; the pictorial fact completes its presentation.
Daily newspapers keep the events of the moment;

that is the peculiar duty
of the newspaper.
Busy news readers read

Chevrolet Turned 115,000 Units

Last Month

Detroit, July 1. Chevrolet turned out more than 115,000 units in June a month which ordinarily marks a slowing down of the industry as a whole. Because the demand for new Chevrolets continues to exceed the supply, the company announces, a heavy production schedule has been set up for July and likely will run into August.

M. E. Coyle, present and general manager, declared that July production will be at least as high as June, and may exceed it.

"We are going into July under obligation to keep up production at the maximum," Mr. Coyle said.
"The orders we already have, plus those coming in during the month, are enough to assure continued peak activity. In other years we would be expecting a seasonal let-down, but the way I visualize the immediate future, I would say that our demand will continue well into August."

"Talk of a Chevrolet 'shortage' is to be expected, when the dealers can't get the cars in the quantities they want and need. It's a pleasant kind of shortage to face, however.
It is a great tribute to our product, that buyers who want new cars are willing to await arrival from the Chevrolet factories—at a season when motorists most need and enjoy their cars. That means that they didn't merely order a car, but were actually sold, in the full sense of the word, on the merits and value of our product."

"Our present situation is one that spells volume for factory and dealers, and indicates a great return of buying power and an improvement in morale among the people. Further, it promises steady employment for thousands thru-out a period when, in normal 'no shortage' years, they would be idle."

"Dealers in various sections of the country report splendid business prospects at a season which usually brings a gradual tapering-off of sales. The sustained buying that is evidenced this summer is traceable, I believe, to the vastly improved conditions of the farmer over the country as a whole."

"Optimism is greater in the Middle Western states, predominantly agricultural areas. Iowa, Kansas, and the Dakotas have had abundant rains, eliminating droughts as a factor to be feared, since crops are now so far advanced that a bumper yield is assured."

"Throughout the fertile areas around the Great Lakes—in fact everything East of the Rocky Mountains—much the same conditions are to be found. Farmer and city dweller alike are buying cars and trucks—and trucks make up a substantial part of the total. We are especially gratified over conditions in the commercial car field, because the improvement is so evident that they may be taken as an added indication that business will maintain its upward trend."

"No matter from what angle it is viewed, the outlook for the remainder of the season is bright. It will take our best efforts to keep pace with the demand."

Voice of a Snake

Besides the little hiss that seems to be common with most snakes they are generally incompetent to make any noise. There is one snake, however, the big water python or anaconda of Brazil, which gives a peculiar phasing cry at night.
